Air Transportation: A Key To National Growth

"Ladies and Gentlemen, this is your organic aviation. Weightless flight. I have just learned from the flight control that the nose of the airplane will go up for take-off. It's hard to believe that a machine can do something like that."

Perhaps you have heard that aviation is becoming so familiar that we take it for granted. But that is not true. Is it? It's true. Is it? It's not. Is it? It is. It's not. Is it? It is.

But where it is least noticeable is in the air. Where the clear blue skies we take for granted are filling up like an eggshell with weather and atmosphere.

In recent years, national attention has been focused on the problems of the nation's major airports—particularly those in New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles. Every increasing air traffic has reached saturation point.

Perhaps you have wondered about the congestion problem facing all of us in almost every area of our lives. We can use as an example the traffic jams and delays on our streets and our crowded airports.

U of R Professors Set up Tutoring Classes

A group of University of Rochester professors has set up a program to assist black high school students in order to counteract the effects of a summer vacation period and evening working hours of those students.

More than that, the program is intended to be a step toward the furthering of the University's goal of assisting black students to gain an education.

The program, set up by a group of black students, is administered by the University's Center for Assistance to Black Students (CAPP).

The program is open to students from black schools who are enrolled in pre-college programs at the University's Summer Science Institute and the Summer Science and Mathematics Institute.

The program will be conducted during the summer months and will include academic counseling, tutoring, and assistance with financial aid.

Participants in the program will receive financial aid and assistance with the costs of college tuition and fees.

The program is available to students from either the city or the suburbs. Students will be selected based on need and performance.

The program will provide a range of services, including academic counseling, tutoring, and assistance with financial aid.
