Delegation at Washington

"A delegation...headed by publisher Howard W. Coes, journeyed to the nation's capital to seek aid for the residents of the third ward as well as other inner city homeowners, also to ask federal representatives to 'stay' demolition of the historic memorial AME Zion Church, which is scheduled to come down making way for a local developer to erect a cluster of individual homes on that site. The church was built in 1817 and represents the "beginnings" where the black citizens began their march of progress. Coes pointed out that urban renewal HUB, city council etc. have given millions of dollars to the "white residents" who have recently bought homes within the northern portion of the old historic third ward. He is protesting in bringing a mounted and an illegal injunction sought to prohibit the usage of a new city ordinance to be used against the "black Citizens of the... Third Ward."

Xerox board, died Nov. 22 in the New York City apartment of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, where he had been living as a personal friend. Crowded with the memories of our common hero were members of the family and friends and a great person who had been taken from us all too soon. In addition to his wife, the Rev. Charles J. Davis said, "He was a personal friend. Crowded with the memories of our common hero were members of the family and friends and a great person who had been taken from us all too soon."

In his first semester, was one of the students who were studying Haloid's work and were interested in the possibilities of the company's research. "I think that this was one of the most important things we ever had in our lives," said Peer. "It was an experience which we should all keep in mind when we are considering the possibilities of our future."}

During the war years, most of the research and development work was done in secret, with the exception of the work done in the laboratory at the Xerox Square. In 1948, the company entered into a contract with the United States Government to develop a new type of photographic film. The contract was signed by Mr. Wilson and Dr. Dessauer, and the work was carried out in the laboratory at Xerox Square. The results of the work were made public in 1949, and the film was named "Haloid Repro." The film was later used in the production of the first color television camera. The development of this film was a major step forward in the field of electronic photography.

Mr. Wilson also played an important role in the company's financial affairs. In 1949, he was elected president of the company, and in 1952 he was elected chairman of the board. In 1956, exclusive world-wide rights to the use of the Haloid Repro process were granted to Mr. Wilson's company by the United States Government. This was a major event in the history of the company, and it was a major step forward in the development of electronic photography.

Mr. Wilson was a great person, and his memory will be revered for many years to come. He will be missed by all of us, and his contributions to the field of electronic photography will be long remembered. We are all grateful to him for his work, and we will always remember him as a personal friend.

An art forgery? Kodak's Charlie Bridgman may help find the answer.

A painting by Renoir that sold for $16.80 a century ago brought over $1 million at a recent London auction. Last year one gallery paid over $35 million for a single painting. But in today's bull market for art, how does the purchaser know he is getting the genuine article and not a fake?

Many gallery and museum curators in this country and abroad seek the technical advice of the noted radiography expert, Charles F. Bridgman of our Marketing Education Center in Henrietta. For about 25 years Charlie has been developing special methods of using x-rays and x-ray film to examine works of art. He feels that a lot of fine artistic talent is wasted by forgers. "It's a pity it's so misdirected," because an art piece or work of art that's been fraudulently tampered with is worth much less than the unaltered article. And a complete forgery can be worthless.

Major art purchasers don't want to get burned. It's gratifying that Charlie's expertise helps assure that the art they display to the public is the real thing.

Why fork over $3.3 million of our hard-earned cash to colleges?

Both public and private colleges and universities—and private institutions in particular—are having a tougher time making ends meet nowadays. The increased tuition that you may have been paying is just one symptom of the financial pressures felt by American higher education. At Kodak, we feel the need to support higher education, and have been doing so for years. For a good business reason. Schools that have educated competent people who work for us have earned not only our respect and gratitude, but also a bit of our cash with which to keep striving. We then hope to hire a share of the graduates that these colleges and universities will help educate.

Any accredited school that confers a bachelor's or graduate degree on a Kodak employee who joined the company within five years of that award—and who has worked with the company for five years—will receive $750 for each year our employee attended ($3,750 if the school is publicly supported).

In addition, we make research and special grants for capital improvement and endowment campaigns. The total for our 1971 educational aid program was $3.3 million. (We've contributed over $30 million to more than 400 institutions in the last decade.)

From Beethoven to basketball: Don't miss the action just because you can't be there.

If the weather or other circumstances keep you indoors this winter, good music and sports are only as far away as your radio. For music lovers, the Women's Committee of the Civic Music Association offers its "Rochester Philharmonic Preview" series on WROC-FM (90.7) every Wednesday from 10 to 11 p.m. Here, Tom Ryan and noted music commentator Richard Gladwell (a computer expert at Kodak) serve up music and interviews with visiting artists, conductors, and orchestra members performing in the Philharmonic concerts.

For sports fans, Joe Cullinan is calling the action of University of Rochester basketball on WYCE. Highlighting the season will be the annual Kodak College Basketball Classic, December 29 and 30. University of Rochester will host two nationally ranked teams—University of Pennsylvania and West Coast power Southern California—and the perennially strong St. Bonaventure University team.

We'd be glad to support both programs because they help make this community a bit more interesting a place to live and work.

Experiencing Biomedical Research To Combat Sickle Cell Disease

By Congressman Frank Horton

It has been said that diseases are no respectors of boundaries -- social, racial, economic or geographic. Generally, this is true. However, some diseases, particularly those which involve chronic illness or death, remain a constant concern to many people -- our black citizens. In a denominational sense, disease is described as evil, but not for having become nation theoretical or modern, until recent years. In the nation of the United States, the area is now under the authority of the nation's government. I believe, is not too late. We, as a nation and as a people, must take our responsibility seriously and as a priority. I have visited many hospitals in diverse communities in various parts of our country and have heard their personal stories. Each of these cases is a reminder of the importance of our support of sickle cell disease. Sickle cell disease is a serious disease that affects not only the individual, but entire families. The disease is characterized by episodes of acute pain and chronic fatigue. In recent years, there has been an increase in the number of people who are affected by this disease. However, the resources available to address this issue are limited. The National Institutes of Health (NIH) has established the National Sickle Cell Disease Center (NCCDC) and the National Sickle Cell Disease Program (NSCDP) to provide coordination and research on sickle cell disease. These programs have been instrumental in advancing the understanding of the disease and improving the quality of life for those affected. Despite these efforts, there is still much work to be done. The disease is particularly challenging for communities where healthcare access is limited. Therefore, it is important to continue to support research and awareness efforts to ensure that all individuals who are affected by sickle cell disease have access to the necessary care and support. In conclusion, I urge all of us to continue to support the efforts to combat sickle cell disease. By doing so, we can create a brighter future for those affected and their families.
